Section 1: Section 1

In Ireland, here is a clear example of how the small, often informal, and non-entrepreneurial firms have been able to compete with the large, formal, and entrepreneurial firms. In 2010, the government of Ireland announced a €3 billion rescue package for the banking sector, which was followed by a further €10 billion in 2011. This was aimed at stabilising the economy and preventing a collapse. The package included guarantees for bank deposits, recapitalisation of banks, and support for the real estate market. It also provided funding for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) through the Small Business Support Scheme. The scheme provided grants and loans to SMEs to help them grow and compete in the market. The package was widely seen as a success, as it helped to stabilise the economy and prevent a collapse. It also provided a lifeline for many SMEs, which were struggling to survive in the difficult economic environment.

Introduction

In this paper, with previous research in practice, further information, and analysis, it is identified that there is a lack of proper education, and no consideration to social inclusion in primary school (1). In addition, the lack of professional practice for teachers in primary school (2) is another problem in maintaining the primary school community. Furthermore, the lack of professional practice for teachers in primary school (3) is another problem in primary school (1).

Section 1- Research

In Ireland, there has been new growth in early intervention in recent years ago to provision for approximately 100,000 children in 2000 (DSS, 2018). This growth is due to the increasing number of children with disabilities, and mental health issues by the Department of Health of Ireland (3).

Section 2- Preliminary Literature Research

With the increase in children with special needs, areas relating to their education and development are in decline that explores the lack of education for children with special needs. The lack of education for children with special needs is due to the lack of CPD and qualified learning factors in the classroom. It is also reasonable to consider that the more training there is, the better the outcome will be. Therefore, the more training there is, the better the outcome will be. Therefore, the more training there is, the better the outcome will be.

Introduction

As a teacher, I am aware of the increasing concern over higher, yet lower prices in education, with current reforming efforts in the further Education sector through the introduction of more cohesive and coherent arrangements for continuing professional development (CPD) (Nahm, 2014) and issues of practicality. Furthermore, in contrast to the introduction of the National Curriculum (NC) in 2007, 2015), the introduction of a standardised curriculum, marking a significant act of centralisation, has been slow to emerge, with significant acts of centralisation occurring in the absence of a structured system of accountability, responsibility, and oversight, in FE. ## Section 1 Literature Review

In addition, he further emphasises the relative newness and has grown over the last few years ago to provision for apprenticeship training (2014). In 2014, he highlights the relatively recent and ongoing learning environment, which is a significant development in the vocational sector, if we consider what is meant by the brief definition of development as 'the creation and promotion of opportunities' (3).

Section 2- Preliminary Literature Review

While there are many conference papers on areas relating to CPD, research areas, he also highlights the importance of teachers that explore their CPD, as well as the role of teachers and CPD and its relationship to the industry, experience, and qualifications, in particular for those working in Ireland, but also in other countries such as the United States. He suggests that it would be interesting to explore the role of teachers in the classroom and how they teach, as well as the impact of the teacher on the students, as well as what is 'good' teaching. ### Section 4 Initiatives

In India the educational sector is relatively new and has been growing rapidly in recent years, including various initiatives to go to provisions
